

Body Politics

John Howard Yoder, Body Politics (Scottsdale: Herald Press, 1992),

To be political is to make decisions, to assign roles, and to distribute powers. 'Politics' affirms a recognition that we deal with matters of power, of rank and of money, and of costly decision. The difference between church and state or between a faithful and an unfaithful church is not that one is political and the other not, but that they are political in different ways. Introduction ix.
